Today you will journey into the rugged “no man’s land” of the interior highlands. This drive takes you on a rough mountain road through the Þjórsárdalur valley, once a prosperous farmland until it was devastated by an eruption from one of Iceland’s most active volcanoes, Hekla, in 1104.

After the refreshing soak, you will head back to the south coast with a view to the notorious Hekla, which in the old days was believed to be an entrance to hell.

And no trip to the south coast is complete without a visit to the black volcanic beach near the town of Vík, where you will have a great view of the stunning Dyrhólaey cape and the Reynisdrangar basalt sea stacks.
